Sequence Stratigraphy and Marine to Nonmarine Facies Architecture of Foreland Basin Strata, Book Cliffs, Utah, U.S.A.: Discussion¹

Shuji Yoshida², Andrew D. Miall³, and Andrew Willis⁴

INTRODUCTION

Van Wagoner (1995) published a lengthy facies description and sequence interpretation of the Castlegate Sandstone and the underlying Desert Member of the Blackhawk Formation of the Book Cliffs of Utah (Figure 1). We take issue with Van Wagoner in a number of areas, including the following: (1) facies interpretation and regional sequence stratigraphic framework of the Blackhawk-Castlegate succession, (2) the sequence generating mechanism, (3) paleogeographic reconstruction of the lower Castlegate Sandstone, and (4) many of the details of the general nonmarine sequence model that Van Wagoner proposed.

Van Wagoner's field study was limited to the area east of Green River. In this area the Castlegate Sandstone corresponds to the cliff-forming sandstone unit termed the lower Castlegate Sandstone by Fouch et al. (1983), based on their studies of the type section at Price Canyon, north of Price, Utah. The upper Castlegate Sandstone of Fouch et al. (1983) passes into the Sego and Neslen formations east of Green River (Figures 2, 3). Our detailed mapping of the area west of Green River (Yoshida et al., 1996) clarified the facies and sequence relationships of these units and provides the basis for the comments contained in this discussion.

REGIONAL SEQUENCE STRATIGRAPHIC FRAMEWORK

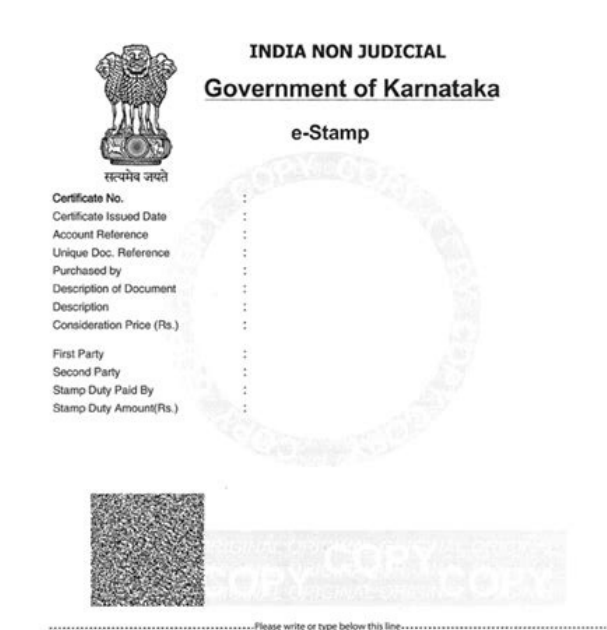

Van Wagoner (1995) assumed, without carrying out field mapping west of the Green River, that both the Castlegate and the Desert sequence boundaries are regionally traceable for a great distance, and he extrapolated his observations of the Desert sequence architecture east of Green River westward into updip localities. He stated (1995, p. 146) that lowstand sandstones in both the Desert Member and the lower Castlegate Sandstone sequences are fluvial sheet sandstones contained within incised valleys at least 50 mi (80 km) wide; however, Yoshida et al. (1996) showed that the erosional sequence boundaries of the Desert Member and the lower Castlegate Sandstone sequences differ in lateral extent both in updip and downdip directions. The Castlegate sequence boundary is traceable along the entire Book Cliffs outcrop belt (Figure 2). By contrast, the high-frequency sequences of the upper Blackhawk Formation (Sunnyside, Grassy, and Desert members) have type 1 erosional sequence boundaries with limited lateral extent. These sequences are characterized by well-developed dendritic incised-valley systems and well-preserved interfluvial areas (e.g., O'Byrne and Flint, 1995) within the area overlying the Paleozoic Paradox basin (Figure 1), but in updip and downdip directions these sequence boundaries become less erosional and finally become conformities. No incised-valley systems extend beyond this area (O'Byrne and Flint, 1995; Yoshida et al., 1996) (Figures 2, 3).

The Desert sequence boundary is conformable northwest of Trail Canyon (Yoshida et al., 1996) (Figures 2, 3) and downdip near Sagers Canyon
