Asus sabertooth z97 mark 1 bios update

17 / 13 in LGA1155 - 2 slots ddr3 dimm (dual channel, ddr3 1600/1333, máx 16GB) the current version of the bios is 2015 (2801) and the last one is: 3503 with asus, the files are called cap files and supposedly have a "EZ Flash" option that I tried to use. I bought a 1tb samsung 970 evo plus nvme M.2 V-NAND and 2 different M.2 pcie x16 adapters for it, in case the original one does not work, but I found that the new drive the current version of the bios should be new enough to accept and recognize the M.2 units, as it is detected and has some type of nvme configuration listed within the bios, but it would be good to have the last available. I downloaded the latest version of the bios and removed it to the root location of an ob fat32 flash drive, I used a new brand of 16GB sandisk cruzerUSB, if you want to confirm that it is FAT32 safe? Would you like to be the model number? SDCZ60-016G-AW461 SDCZ60-016G-AW461 Tab Inside the BIOS, I select the Firmware Update option, refer to the drive and the file, but when I tell you to "read" the .cap file, it says that it is not a "valid" BIOS version and does nothing. ----- If anything, I wonder if there is a BIOS configuration somewhere that is not allowing the M.2 drive to work or even to boot? Windows isn't seeing the drive even as a secondary option. It is not appearing on Windows at all. When I turn on Intel's fast storage technology in BIOS, I get a blue screen error message that I have a screenshot of. Thanks for the help or suggestion on what else to look inside the BIOS and try. If it were, I would try to install an older BIOS before the last one. Without really knowing this board, I can tell you that you often need a minimal version to update to the latest. Therefore, make a gradual update in the steps. Also note that the BIOS 3503 is a beta version and, therefore, is not fully tested. Which is odd, since it's supposedly from 2018, you already have the latest BIOS; The 3503 is a beta BIOS and is not intended for normal use. BETA BIOS are released for a specific reason, i.e. backup some hardware or fix a problem when using some hardware. The use of BETA BIOS is not recommended, unless you need a specific solution that is indicated in the release notes. Only my opinion, however, you are fighting a losing battle. NVME Drive Support never worked all right until it came to the 2xx series chipsets, i.e. Z270. In those [and then] works without printing. Same on the AMD side. There were some 990FX chipset boards that had an M.2 slot, however, those didn't work well at all. With the introduction of X370 Panels, NVME works very well on AMD as well. Hello everyone, thank you for the I also noticed beta and thought nothing has been updated, since nothing has been cleared by the name. So, would you say that the latest version of bios would be: 2702 from 2015? I don't even see the one I've listed.Site . I wonder why that is no longer there? What base plates are there for ah? Would you suggest that maximize or make the unit M.2 work perfectly? Did you tell 2xx series chip-boards for Intel? Do you know if any base plate of the 2xx series would be compatible with an old I7 CPU as an Intel Core i7-4790k? Thanks for more information. No, not the last BIOS ie, the BIOS version is 2801 [that you have] I do not know why you can not see that BIOS. When I go to the support page, it is there. Personally I would give up using M.2 on that board, however, if you want to try BETA BIOS, use Ezflash to update. If it does not work with Ezflash, then pull the towel. towel.
