Farewell to stromness pdf

Skip this sectionSkip this sectionTracksRecordingsPlaylistsAlbumsArtistsStories Sir Peter Maxwell Davies has passed away last year. He was a keen environmentalist. He wrote The Yellow Cake Revue, a collection of cabaret-style pieces that he performed with actress Eleanor Bron, in protest at plans to mine uranium ore in Orkney.Farewell to Stromness, which is probably his most famous pece is taken from this suite. The slow, walking bass line that pervades the Farewell portrays the residents of the village of Stromness having to leave their homes as a result of uranium contamination. It was first performed at the St Magnus Festival on Orkney. Stromness is the second largest town in Orkney.Had the proposed development been approved , Stromness would have been just two miles from the uranium mine's core, and the centre most threatened by pollution. Stromness, Orkney Islands by Geoff Wong One of the most respected composers of his generation, Peter Maxwell Davies (1934–2016) bridged medieval and contemporary music with often-challenging compositions, though his style softened in his later years. His best-known piece Farewell to Stromness is a wistful piano interlude from a 1980 work The Yellow Cake Revue written in response to a proposal for uranium mining near the composer's home. The piece isn't particularly indicative of his music overall, but it is certainly among his most immediately accessible and most enchantingly simple melodies. The composer himself recognized this: "My little piano piece Farewell to Stromness has almost become a folk tune. People just say, 'I like that piece,' and they don't know who wrote it. It gets played an awful lot at funerals these days. And that's very unusual, for a so-called serious composer, to write a piece that people like so much, and they don't care who it's by." The slow, walking bass line that pervades the Farewell portrays the residents of the village of Stromness having to leave their homes as a result of uranium contamination. A curiosity: this piece was written to protest against the opening of a uranium mine in the Orkney islands in northern Scotland, near the city of Stromness, where the composer lived. The italian premiere was given to M° Carlo Boccadoro in 1996. © Copyright 2021 Piano B Agency | Privacy Policy | Cookie Policy
