This worksheet focuses on writing composed sentences and is ideal for nursing classes. Teachers can feel free from stamp Are this page to use in the classroom. The compound sentences are composed of two simple sentences connected by a coordinated conjunction. A great way to remember, the conjunctions are FanBoys: F - for: Reasons A - E: Added / Subsequent Action N - NA ©: Not one or another B - MA: Contrasting and unexpected results or - O: SHOTELS AND CONDITIONS Y - Again: conflicting and unexpected results s - So: The actions undertaken here are some sample composed phrases: Tom arrived at home. Then he ate dinner. -> Tom arrived at home and ate dinner. We studied many hours for the test. We have not exceeded the test. -> We studied many hours for the test, but we didn't exceed it. Peter doesn't need to buy a new car. Also he doesn't need to go on vacation. -> Peter doesn't need to buy a new car, he nor needs to go on vacation. The conjunctions are used for different purposes in sentences. A comma is always positioned before the conjunction. Here are the main uses of the fanboys: and "and" is used as a coordinated conjunction to show that something is in addition to something else. Another use of "e" is to demonstrate that an action follows another. Also: Tom enjoys playing tennis, and likes to cook. Next action: we returned home, and went to bed. But / yet both "but" and "still" are used to counter the pros and cons or show unexpected results.Ä, pros and cons of a situation: ä, we wanted to visit our friends, but we didn't have enough money to get a Flight.unexpected Results: Janet did very well for his job interview, yet he did not get the position. So / to confuse these two coordination conjunctions are easy. "So" expresses a result based on a reason. "For" provides reason. Consider the following sentences: Ä, I need money. I went to the bank. The result of needing money is that I went to the bank. In this case, you use "then". I needed money, so I went to the bank. The reason I went to the bank is because I needed money. In this case, use "for". I went to the bank, because I needed money. Effect-> Mary needed some new clothes, so she went shopping. Cause -> I stayed at home for the holiday, because they had to work.
