How to make a paper longer word count

Any form of writing can at times be an agonizing process. Well, not everyone has a knack for writing! For students, it is much worse because they have no option, they have assignments and term papers that require lots and lots of writing. You will often find a student with more than one writing assignment. Obviously, it can be quite stressful especially with all the requirements that need fulfilling before the paper can be termed as being complete. The Word count or the number of pages is one such requirement. Despite having finished writing, you will in some cases find that you've not achieved the required length and that can be quite stressful. You've not attained the required paper length and time is running out, what do you do? Majority of students have resorted to what I may describe as not smart" ways of getting the right length such as using formatting tricks, fluff, and filler content. There are smarter ways of getting the right length without compromising the readability of your paper. Check out these tips on how to write a longer article: How to Make Your Paper Longer, Before Writing Writing a good paper is a process that takes time and requires thorough preparation. Being prepared puts you in a position where you can comfortably write your paper reaching the required length without a hustle. Some students have the habit of rushing through the paper. Once they have the topic, they don't take the time to do research, including to organize their thoughts. Here are three things that you can do to make your paper longer before writing: Research - this is a rather crucial part of writing. It is vital that you be knowledgeable on the topic at hand. Well, how else are you going to get the information you need for writing? You can write as much as you can as long as its factual information, and you're not just repeating yourself. Research is the only way to have all the facts that you need. Outline the main points - from the moment that you first started writing essays and such papers alike; one of the rules was always to describe your main points. Other than giving flow to your work, it makes your article longer. It guides you to elaborate on points further, helping you increase the length of the article. Order Now Think outside the box" - so you are done with research and have established the main points, but then you realize that it may not be enough to reach the required word count. It is at this stage that you may have to think beyond the given topic to get information to add to your paper. However, only do this if you are confident that there's no more information that you can divulge and be careful not to divert too much from the main subject, only broaden the scope. How to Make Your Essay Longer: While Writing While writing there are a couple of things you can do to make your article longer. In fact, it is this stage you have a chance of smartly ensuring that you increase the length of your paper. Using examples - giving examples to further back your points is an effective way of not only providing evidence to your readers but also increasing the word count of your essay. You have the liberty of using more than one example but then be cautious not to overdo it. Quotations - using quotes, just like examples, supports your points. Cite your sources as a way of giving more proof to your readers. However, don't just use them just for the sake of it, this can distort the quality of your paper. Transitional words and phrases - these include words such as: Therefore Likewise Moreover As well as not to mention by the same token coupled with in the same fashion again also and equally equally important Make an Order with 15%OFF identically in the light of then to to say nothing of as as well as like together with uniquely comparatively correspondingly furthermore likewise of course This is just to mention a few. These words and phrases are often used in essays to link and introduce ideas. They help to create a connection between sentences and eventually give flow to your paper. Such phrases not only provide readability to your essay but also help you increase your word count. How to Write a Longer Paper: After writing Some tricks that you might come across in your writing might be having insufficient information resources. You might exhaust your ideas for writing before you hit your target word count. There are ways you can use to write a longer paper even after you have exhausted your content, explored below: Go through the Introduction and Conclusion: The ideas that you had in mind while starting your essay might evolve as you write the rest of the article. If you began with the introduction, you should reread it and confirm if you left out any critical information that's vital for making the reader understand your reasoning. The conclusion should bear a summary of your main points as well as proving a recommendation to the reader for their consideration. Have someone proofread your essay: having your paper looked at by someone else plays an important role to your essay as he or she will be able to identify the tiny details that you skipped. The universal perspective of the author might mislead you to overlook some detailed information in the story. There will be some part that might be confusing or hard to grasp. Take note of these areas and as you go through your essay. Also, revising it as you add more information to make it easier for your readers to understand the areas of contention. Read your paper out aloud: this will make you aware of the syntactical and grammatical flaws that you might not have noticed or your editing software did not identify. Rephrase the sentences to fix these errors and add a bit of more details to boost your word count. You might also realize that some parts of your essay will require you to add more information. This will increase the word count and lengthen the paper a bit. Take a break. You might be stuck or just out of any more ideas, and you seem to be making no breakthrough. Break away from the writing for a snack, a walk or phone call. This will break the monotony of writing, and when you come back to read through the paper, you will have a fresh perspective. You will also get new ideas that you will insert into your paper making it longer, strong>Have you tutor go over your paper - Most professors, teachers or their assistants are willing and available to go through your paper before you submit it. You can even make an appointment with them to go over the essay with you if more time is available. They will offer you tips on how to better approach the prompt. They will also identify errors that you might not have. After all, who is better placed for this role apart from the one who will grade the paper? Reading the question or prompt over and over will give you a clearer understanding of the task at hand especially for those topics that you've a hard time wrapping your head around. You should do this especially after you've concluded, bearing in mind the following questions: Have you answered all the questions in the prompt? Did you provide extra information to back your arguments? Did you omit information that might make your arguments more understandable? Have you satisfied other instructional requirements apart from length? If any of your answers suggest a shortfall, then revisit your paper paying attention to the particular area of interest. Doing the rectifications will make your essay longer. Outline review: if you included an outline at the beginning of your article as a guide for the path you will take, it is necessary you go back to it and review it. You might have skipped some points that might lead to increasing both the value and length of your essay. Conclusion Writing is fun when you've mastered such tips. Otherwise, it ends up being rather stressful and apparently not fun at all. For students, it is more hectic because it is compulsory to write papers as part of your grading, and whether you're passionate about that or not is quite frankly irrelevant. Therefore, it is your responsibility to devise ways of making the process easy and enjoyable. Meeting specific requirements as part of producing a high-quality paper, and paper length is one such requirement. The length of an essay is an important component of any good college paper. When you follow a given prompt's instructions for size, it shows your professor that you read, and were able to fulfill the given requirements. It also shows that you put a lot of thought and effort into the writing process. You never want to be under the minimum word or page count for the final draft, so it's key to fill up your paper with great content. When you're struggling with how to make an essay longer, it can be easy to get overwhelmed. If you want a better, longer essay, check out our easy tricks to increase the size of your paper! Ways to Make a Paper Longer Want to know how to make a paper longer? There's a lot of ways to make your essay seem longer with bigger font sizes and large margins, but those won't fool your professor. Use our tricks to make your paper longer, and you'll get that minimum in no time. Tip #1: Use examples. When you're wondering how to lengthen an essay, the first thing you should do is look at the claims you made. Go back through and find the ideas you put forward. Did you back those ideas up with examples? If you didn't, try adding a bit of research that proves your claim is accurate. Not only will this strengthen arguments, but it will lengthen your paper. Say you claimed that UFOs were real—you could include an example of an eyewitness sighting, or reference a documentary. You should even use multiple examples for each idea! Your professor will be impressed that claims are supported, and as a result, your writing will be longer. Tip #2: Use phrases/words to transition ideas. A more natural way to increase the length of the writing is to include transitional words. It allows you to jump from one idea to the next while bringing your readers along with you gently. They also will raise the length of your text! It's a win/win situation. Try using some of these phrases in your paper: Read also: Different Types of Sentences Tip #3: Try reverse outlining. Reverse outlining is exactly what it sounds like. After you've written your paper, try reading back through it and create an outline based on what you've already written. This can help you reorganize pages in a way that makes more sense to people reading your work, and it can point out areas that you need to develop more. If you see a point you made that you can clarify more, take the opportunity to make your writing longer. If you see large paragraphs that introduce more than one idea, try breaking them up into multiple paragraphs, and explain ideas more thoroughly. Tip #4: Go over your prompt. Again, you've probably already read your prompt a million times by this point, but if you have a problem with getting a really long text, reread it. Think—have you answered all of the questions your professor posed? Did you back them up with convincing language? Take the time to make sure you have filled all the requirements. If you haven't, you should make your document longer with the extra information. Tip #5: Use expert quotes. Quotations take up more space. Make sure your paper isn't mostly quotations from other writers (some of the writing left should be yours), but it's okay to spice up your own work with researched quotes from experts. This is a legitimate way to not only increase the number of words but to prove that there are other writers out there that know what you do, and agree with ideas. Make sure you use formatting correctly to quote and cite sources! Tip #6: Format your paragraphs. Make sure each of the paragraphs has correct formatting. Each paragraph in the essay structure should have a topic sentence, supporting evidence and/or argument, and a conclusion or transition. If some of your paragraphs are missing parts of this formatting, create sentences that will fill these requirements. Tip #7: Use more words It's similar to a silly suggestion, to "just use more phrases or words!" But hear us out, and take a look at your work. There are some sneaky ways to use several instead of one... Include "to be" verbs. Avoid saying "I eat quickly." Try writing, "I am a quick eater." Be more descriptive. Don't say "We had fun at the fair." Say "My friend and I went to the fair this weekend. We had so much fun riding the Ferris wheel and eating funnel cakes." Turn verbs into nouns. "I arrived at the conclusion that..." is longer than "I concluded..."
