چھٹی کی گھنٹی بجی اور کلاس کی ساری لڑکیاں اپنے اپنے بستے اُٹھا کر کمرے سے باہر نکلیں۔ نرگس ابھی دوپہار قدم ہی چلی تھی کہ لڑکیوں کی ایک ٹولی نے اُسے گھیر لیا اور لگیں فقرے بازی کرنے۔ "اُوئی آنکھیں ہیں کہ کٹورے"....."لیکن بُوا نرگس! ان موٹے موٹے دیدوں سے کچھ نظر بھی آتا ہے۔ یا صرف نمائش کے لیے ہی ہیں۔"....."واہ! بڑی آنکھیں کچھ کہنے والی دیکھتی نہیں وہ کیسے مگر مگر سب کو دیکھ رہی ہے۔" اور بھٹی اس میں بُرا ماننے کی کیا بات ہے ابھی امتحان لیے لیتے ہیں۔ (اُنکیاں دکھاتے ہوئے) "کیوں بُوا نرگس یہ ایک اُننگی ہے کہ دو؟" "ارے بھٹی مُعاف بھی کر دو بے چاری کو ابھی کل ہی تو اسکول میں داخل ہوئی ہے۔ کیسی معصوم سی ہے کیوں تنگ کرتی ہو..." اری چُپ بڑی آئی ہمدرد جیسے تڑپ رہی تو اس کی اماں جان ہے۔

Twitter Twitter reportedly is getting ready to roll out two-factor authentication in the coming weeks—a development that comes not a moment too soon as the company’s current security efforts fall short. Take Tuesday, when the state of Twitter—s account security was on full display as hackers took over the Associated Press Twitter account and falsely reported two explosions at the White House. The AP attack came just a few days after Twitter accounts controlled by CBS News—including ones for 60 Minutes, 48 Hours, and a network affiliate station in Denver—were taken over. The malicious attacks would have been harder, if not impossible, to pull off had these Twitter accounts been protected with two-factor authentication. Wired reports that feature will roll out to Twitter accounts gradually in the coming weeks. Two-factor authentication requires you to enter two login tokens before you can access an online account. The first token is your standard password (something you know), while the second is a login code randomly generated by a smartphone app or sent via SMS or email (something you have). Two-factor authentication is becoming a common security feature for many online services you already use including Dropbox, Facebook, Google, and Microsoft. It may be a little inconvenient to deal with two-factor authentication, but anyone who’s lost control of their Facebook or email account can tell you the extra security gain is worth the minor hassle. Here—s a quick look at how two-factor authentication currently works for the major online services you use every day. Google The best account to start with if you—re new to two-factor authentication is Google, because you can use the Google Authenticator smartphone app to generate random access codes for many other services. To set it up, visit Google—s two-step verification landing page and click the Get Started button on the top right-hand side of the window. Facebook does not use Google Authenticator for its authorization of two factors, which calls for approval session. Instead, receives access c—ods v—aa SMS or generates them with the mi—ov—l Facebook application. To start connecting to Facebook and go to the safety tab. Find the heading that claims to start approval session and click on the right side of the screen. Facebook will then send a security code to its smart phono through SMS to start the function. If you are ever in a number without cell reception, you can continue using the onset of Facebook session through the mi—ov—l Facebook application for Android and opening the left navigation bar and selecting Code generator under adjustments. Facebook session onset approvals work with almost anything that connects to your Facebook account, including third-party mismanage applications with access to Facebook and the company's own applications. What other services do you need? Now you are prepared with authentication of two factors for several of the main lines in line. But there are a lot of services there are also supporting the authentication of two factors, including the main web hosts such as Dream—ost, Blizz—ard Entertainment—A —s Battle net and LastPass. If you are concerned about security, allow the authentication of two factors in these accounts will be a long way to make your life in a more safe line. PDF Package Complete—Sc—argar PDF Complete package This book A brief summary of this document the history class? Well, there are some good news: you can continue discovering (and rediscovering) little-known stories of history, all without the ex—its. We have rounded seven of our favorite history podcasts, which, despite being in tone and thematic matter, you will help you round your reproduction list, but your knowledge of historical events also. They are appropriate in the story of am—ag—n—ate that t—â and your best friend with the c—ow—ormer run your mouths at a work party, both so that someone suggests that you start a podcast. And then, you do, only to become a viral blow. Well, that's what happened to Tracy B. Wilson and Holly Frey, Stuff creators who lost in history. Photo Cortesia: l—heart—radio both history buffs and history teachers swore by this podcast, especially because it deviates in some of the hidden themes of history â—€ "and most last. Best of all, Tracy and Holly have a chemical increase, which makes listening fun and remembers the stories a cinch. Some of our favorites include â—€ —eanne Lister—â —€, an episode about the owner of the queer person, who is written in a c—od—eigo; â—€ —oeSYMH—C Live: Mysteries of the color Blue—â —€, which speaks of the history of tone; And â—€ —ewalt Whitman, poet of democracy, an episode that makes an argument for his theme to be the most important poet in the history of the United States. Have you ever wondered if I taught you the right le—ccion at school, or at least they gave you a complete image of the story? Sometimes, textbooks are wrong, of flagrant disinformation and edition decisions to abuse and the lack of varied sources. If the story of the one at school was not right to its own or by accident, you can see a more complete image with the revisionist history. Photo Cortes—e—a: Matthew Eisman/Getty Images for Ozy Media housed by Malcolm Gladwell, this podcast has deep dives both in people and in historical events. Is Mantra? Give to the ignored and misunderstood a second chance to count history — the right way. Some featured episodes include "Blame Game", which focuses on Toyota's memory of 10 million cars; the museum scandal full of "Dragon Psychology 101," 101; â—€ —oeFree Brian Williams—â —€. The NPR work line explores the moments that have shaped the world and have changed history as we know it. Rounded by Rund Abdell—fatah and R—antin Allfouel, this podcast has a cinematographic sensation that helps bring the historical moments that covers life more than any textbook. For the hosts, each headline has a story, and those stories of the past can help us understand our present, and how much was formed. Photo courtes: NPR issues range from Whitney Houston Performance of the national anthem at the Super Bowl in 1991 to presidential judgments and the invention of the breed. In summary, nothing is out of the numbers â—€ "and that is exactly why Thoroughline must be the next in this podcast tail. Some outstanding episodes include â—€ —ere—framing History: Mass Incarcer—ation—â —€, an exploration in the origins of the US criminal justice system; â—€ —eThe litter myth—â —€, which is revealed in how of course an organization changed the US public relation to waste; And â—€ —e—strange fruit—â —€, an episode that covers Billie Holiday, protest, the war on drugs, and more. Make gay history if you are a fanatic of the self-proclaimed story, you owe yourself and others to tune into an exchange of history that is not usually discussed in schools: the LGBTQ+story. H—yst—ated by Eric Marcus, Making Gay History highlights the pioneers and activists â—€ "and their allies" that have been shaped not only, but also the LGBTQ+community. Photo Courtesy: Making Gay History via Spotify the best of all, most of the episodes are based on an audio file of rare interviews that Marcus carried out The end of the 1980s.
